THE STORY OF HOLY WATER

Using holy water is one of the most ancient continuous traditions and practices that still exists. From time immemorial all cultures have used holy water that was either collected from sacred springs and holy wells or was created through special blessings and magical chants or prayers by a priestess or priest, a holy woman or holy man.

Spiritually Empowered Water

Holy water is spiritually empowered water and its use long predates the emergence of religion. For countless ages holy water has been universally used as a sacrament for purifying, blessing, renewal, rebirth, benediction and connecting to the divine. It has long been used to cleanse spiritual impurities, drive off evil forces and to protect against attacks from negative or demonic energies.

The Divine Feminine

In the ancient world, water was always associated with the divine feminine, the Goddess. The ancients saw water as being the element out of which all things emerged and in which all things were connected.

In Ancient Egypt and Mesopotamia fonts of holy water were to be found in the temples of Isis and Ishtar. The Ancient Egyptians and Greeks used holy water as an agent of divine power to distinguish between the sacred and the profane. The Ancient Romans used holy water in their temples dedicated to the god Jupiter.

To Cleanse and Bless

Holy water has traditionally been used by individuals to cleanse and bless themselves, their families, homes, their fields and gardens and their animals. This was done to confer spiritual protection and blessings upon all aspects of people's lives. It was a common practice right up to the Middle Ages for people to sprinkle their vegetable gardens with holy water as they were dependent upon this for food and livelihood. A failure in the fields and gardens could be devastating for an individual or community.

Ancient Ritual

To this day the use of holy water features very prominently in Balinese culture and it is made in the ancient traditional way in that, it is 'enchanted' or blessed by a Balinese priestess or priest.

Porta Alchémica® Holy Water is created using a very ancient ritual process and is sourced in New Zealand from one of the world's most purest and ancient aquifers.
